DYNAMIC DUO

There is an expression about the family you are born with and the family you choose. In the case of NOAH & JANET the dynamic group of Noah Levy and Janet Karabas, real estate advisors with Engel & Völkers Chicago North Shore, the bond they have built as business partners is a sisterhood in every possible way. “Although we are not related, we are often asked if we are sisters,” says Karabas. “While we have similar hair and coloring, it’s also because of our dynamic. We are both sisters ourselves, and like sisters, we have great communication and keep each other honest.” Known affectionately by colleagues as the “real estate sisters,” the women share a business style that is professional and high touch. “While real estate is definitely a business, few things are more deeply personal or emotionally charged than home,” says Levy, a graduate of Tulane University. “Both of those things are true at the same time, so we commit to carrying our clients through the whole process with attention to the transaction and the human factors.” Karabas, who earned a bachelor’s degree at University of Illinois, says they both prize integrity and transparency, sharing a strong work ethic, and commitment to family. As for role models, Levy’s was none other than television’s Mary Tyler Moore, a hat-in-the-air trailblazer who inspired young women in the 1970s to reach for the stars. Karabas found inspiration in the story of her grandmother, a young immigrant who tragically lost her husband and had to work hard to provide for three children—all with love and an unwavering commitment to her faith. It’s no surprise then that these shared values of home and family are how this dynamic duo came up with their signature statement—“Working Together to Bring you HOME.”
